After three months' time Contractor Cheatwood has not yet on the ground anything like enough blocks for the paving of Main Street from Fifth to Seventh. Out of the discussion, however, has to John W. Thompson, president of grown a concrete suggestion for the protection of the streets of the city publican Fluke.

Out of the discussion, however, has grown a concrete suggestion for the protection of the streets of the city and for fixing responsibility for their uneven, and in some places, ruined condition. This is to transfer from the Gas, Water and Electrical departments to the City Engineer's office all street construction work. At present both the Water Department and the Gas Department are laying mains and making house connections in many sections, and each has its own contractor for replacing street pavings over such trenches. In instance after instance the City Engineer and Committee on Streets have complained of faulty work on the part of these contractors, but the uneven paving has not been repaired, and all over the city one may notice the uneven depressions in paving where gas and water men have dug in the streets, and in the case of graveled or dirt streets, have left a mound that is dangerous.

Under the plan proposed there would be but one contracter for such work directly under supervision of the Engineers office, which could be held directly under supervision of the Engineers office, which could be held directly responsible for the result of the work and for the condition of the streets. When the Water Department, for instance, wanted a plpe laid in a certain street, it would give the order—not to its own contractor—but the Engineers Department, which would have it laid and paving replaced, and charge the whole cost to the Water Department. Thus all city work in the public streets would be under the Engineers of the whole cost to the Water Department. Thus all city work in the public streets would be under the Engineers of the whole cost to the Water Department.
